TAKING FLIGHT

BY LARISSA FORESE NIGHT & DAY

Spending my morning gliding through the sky, Ohio-based hot air balloon pilot Greg Miller helped me climb into the basket, but not before I helped him get his balloon ready for the air. As Mr. Miller poured gasoline into the fans, inflating the balloon, I held on tight to a rope while stepping on a wire, allowing the balloon to rise off the ground.

Before I knew it, he gave me the signal to release the rope and back away from the balloon as he continued to release a stream of fire, really propane, to help it take its form. As the enormous blue, pink and purple balloon came to life, I had to step back and really take in the moment. I was about to be above the trees and what seemed to me, on top of the world.

THE JOURNEY

If you have never been in a hot air balloon or to the Quick Check New Jersey Festival of Ballooning I suggest you move it to the top of your bucket list. Seeing the world from a different perspective is something everyone should experience at least once in their life.

Not only is being thousands of feet in the air thrilling, but getting to know your pilot is half the journey. Stepping into a basket and floating into the air with a stranger is a unique experience to say the least, but that being said, I would not change my first balloon ride one bit — it did help that Mr. Miller is a firefighter back home in Ohio so I knew I was in good hands.

We were the first balloon off the ground as the wind whisked us away from the starting point. Not really knowing what to expect, a million questions flew through my mind: Where were we going to land? Could people see us in the distance? Will whomever's property we land on be okay with three strangers in a balloon dropping out of the sky?

Instead of worrying for the hour-long journey, I decided to talk to Mr. Miller. I quickly learned that his almost 20 years of experience started with him buying his mother a ride for her birthday. Two balloons and 18 years later, Mr. Miller along with his ground crew, Kenny, were experiencing their first New Jersey Festival of Ballooning just like me.

Together, we were taking in the same aerial sights of the Solberg Airport and Readington for the first time. From the tree tops to the people waving to us down below to everyone stopping, staring and pulling out their phones to snap a photo to the deer playing in the creek. It was as magical as it sounds.

Adding to the experience, Mr. Miller and I touched on two topics I am sure every Ohio native loves to converse about: LeBron James and the Cleveland Browns.

Being an avid sports fan and reporter, I, of course asked about LeBron's move to Los Angeles, the NBA Championship in 2016 and Johnny Manziel's journey to the worst football team in the Canadian Football League.

But what intrigued me the most about my pilot was his own journey to owning two balloons and his first time at this balloon festival.

He talked about his elevation, dealing with the air traffic and how flying a balloon is the purest form of navigation. There is no GPS, just coordinates and Kenny, who followed us via pickup truck on the local roads, to help us find a safe place to land.

STICKING THE LANDING

We rode the wind for an hour and eventually decided a parking lot a few miles up the road would be the perfect landing destination. For those who do not know the logistics of landing a balloon, it is a lot more intricate than one would imagine.

It is not as simple as landing on an open patch of land, there is a thought process to touching down on the ground. Mr. Miller entrusted in myself and my photographer to find a place away from cable and phone wires, along with light poles and other lamps. But the most attractive aspect of a perfect landing spot? Dry land.

Something I learned on my trip that may seem obvious to some is keeping the balloon dry. In New Jersey the weather has to be just perfect, if the balloon is wet it takes hours to dry and may even hinder a flight or two.

As I bent my knees to soften the impact, the balloon kissed the ground and just like that my aerial adventure was over.

Sticking true to the attractive nature of a hot air balloon, everyone greeted us with open arms asking about the ride and taking photos of Mr. Miller inflating the balloon with propane before we were able to take it down completely.

Before we could step up and pack the balloon away we had to maneuver to the side as another balloonist decided to follow in our tracks by landing in the same parking lot.

I had to wait to exit the balloon, that way it did not rocket back to the clouds and possibly send Mr. Miller back to Ohio. But my favorite part of this entire excursion was being able to set it up and bring it down. As it deflated, I was able to wrap up the balloon and really be part of the process and truly make a contribution for my special ride.

As we rolled up the balloon and moved the basket into the trailer, we headed back to the airport. Conversation was just as easy in the car as it was up in the air and I thanked Mr. Miller and his co-pilot Kenny as we parted ways.

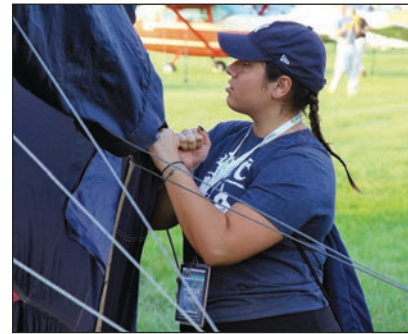

Being up in a balloon may not be for everyone, but for those who I may have convinced that this will be your next adventure in life, I highly suggest asking to be a part of the conversation. Whether that entails setting it up, taking the balloon down, or simply striking up small talk with your pilot, try to squeeze the most out of your adventure as you can, it will only make it that much better.

And for those who are still considered skeptics, the ride is a lot smoother than you may think. Lifting off and setting down is a lot more gentle than probably most of the car rides you have taken. If you're afraid of heights but still may take on the adventure, just look straight out to the distance and soak in the view.

And if I still failed to convince you, I suggest you attend the balloon festival regardless, it is much more than just gliding thousands of feet above the ground. Trust me, I guarantee you have never seen anything like multiple balloons taking off and fading away in the distance.

If I still failed to turn you into a believer, there are specialty balloons that make for good aesthetics and will amaze you that something so large can depict something so simple. Like a blue dog, an Elvis Presley, a Queen's Guard or even a giant saxophone, whether you whisk into the sky or not, this event has something for everyone.

“Seeing the world from a different perspective is something everyone should experience at least once in their life.”

TYPE EAST COAST DOUBLE INDIA PALE ALE

Carton Brewing's East Coast Double IPA was designed in true Jersey form, making the most in balancing through its accentuation of extremes. The beer was inspired by the West Coast IPAs, but Carton, Atlantic Highlands, added a thump of hops to a dynamic malt profile and chose a yeast to drive the two further than they wanted to go. This brew adds fuel to the fire of a dinner, game or an idea. Carton advises that you drink it when your night matters.

CATCH THE SPIRIT OF DISTILLING IN NEW JERSEY

BY SAMANTHA MATTHEWS NIGHT & DAY MAGAZINE

Signature cocktails with unique flavors and ingredients are also increasing in popularity and the basis of a perfectly crafted cocktail is a perfectly distilled spirit. In addition to endless breweries, New Jersey is home to several distilleries that specialize in various spirits and Monmouth and Ocean counties are even home to a few of their own. Whether you're partial to a carefully crafted smooth vodka or prefer a taste of the islands with finely made coconut rum, Monmouth and Ocean counties have a distillery for you.

BEACH BADGE VODKA
COPPER KETTLE SPIRITS
FREEHOLD

Natives of the Jersey Shore know perfectly well that local pride is as real as local summer. In the world of spirits it probably comes as no surprise that when walking into your local liquor store and scanning the vodka options most are not local at all.

NJ Beach Badge Vodka is here to change that and to support local New Jersey, crafted in small batches at Copper Kettle Spirits in Freehold. Ken McCartin, Steve Loures and Gus Menocal are the men behind the Distillery Crew and deem themselves “Red, White and Blue Collar Guys.”

The small batches of vodka produced use high quality local products that allow them to support local New Jersey farmers. According to NJ Beach Badge Vodka’s story on their site, they are Artisan Craft Distillers who favor domestic Main Street over foreign mass-produced products.

Showcasing the best of the Garden State, NJ Beach Badge Vodka and Spirit of NJ Vodka, the distillery’s award-winning vodkas are made slowly with purpose in New Jersey for people who love New Jersey. Copper Kettle Spirits was voted 2018 Best Vodka Distillery in New Jersey by New York International Spirits Competition.

MAD HATTER

STAYS STRONG AND TRUE TO ITS LOCAL ROOTS

BY SAMANTHA MATTHEWS NIGHT & DAY MAGAZINE

Superstorm Sandy swept through shore communities wiping away anything in its path nearly six years ago, but for many business owners rebuilding is something that's still ongoing today. Ever since Sea Bright landmark Mad Hatter was flooded during the hurricane, the Kelly family has done everything in their power to rebuild and come back bigger and better than ever.

A LONG TIME COMING

While the history of the Mad Hatter dates back for years on its own, the establishment itself has been a local gathering spot since the early 1900s. According to owner Scott Kelly, back at its inception it was a Swedish dance bar.

"So it's always been something that was close to the town," said Kelly. Scott and wife Amy Kelly purchased the Mad Hatter in 2006 making sure the restaurant stayed true to its community roots with live music and menu favorites.

Construction for the Mad Hatter began last August when they drove their first pile. They demoed in October, but after a neighbor filed an appeal to stop the project, construction slowed down a bit.

In May the judge dismissed the court case and the green light was bright for construction to continue. While the new building is much larger than the original Mad Hatter, with new offerings and styles, the Mad Hatter that people knew and loved will still be first and foremost.

Today offering something for everyone at the Sea Bright fixture remains top on Kelly's list.

"And that really is what was the key to our success before," said Kelly. "We had a little bit for everybody and we'll continue with that too."

"This is going to be for the average person," said Dean Langella, president of Restaurant Equipment Club. "So they're going to have everything, Sunday brunch, a little bit of everything and keep it cheap and keep it good and keep them coming back. A place that's affordable, you can go two, three times a week."

Restaurant Equipment Club, a division of Singer Equipment, has been instrumental throughout the rebuilding process. Langella is the lead project manager on the Mad Hatter project and Andrew Hill is the assistant project manager.

Other core members on the project are contractors Longview Construction with Edward Jones, Vice President Bill O'Leary and Gary Ramire, Project Manager. Maxey Hayse Design Studios with Susan Pitaccio, Principal is the interior designers behind the project. The architect on the project is Architrave Group, PC with Gerry Spanola as the lead architect.

THE NEW MAD HATTER

According to Kelly, five-and-a-half years ago they sat down with their designer Susan and the whole concept for this project was to make it feel like a beach house and a place to go and hang out that felt like your own beach house.

"When you see the renderings it looks like a big home on the water and that was kind of the concept, the goal that we were going for," said Kelly. "It's a house for everybody to hang out."

"Couldn't change the name of Mad Hatter because that was already legendary," Kelly added with a laugh. "But it was the whole concept."

The walkway on the first floor of the building will lead you straight to the boardwalk and the idea for that level caters to beachgoers with grab n' go food options to take with you to the beach.

While each floor of the three story building has a different feel, it was important to Kelly to keep things super casual and keep Mad Hatter favorites at the core.

"We were known for our thin crust pizza, that was number one," he said "Our food that we're going to be able to have here is going to be all ends."

Kelly explained that customers will have the ability to pick and choose their price point with options to get a high-end steak or choose from a full selection of seafood, but also get the thin crust pizza or a burger.

According to Kelly, the new pizza oven was a little concerning at first, since it is a different type of oven and this pizza is their baby. With the new oven they were able to hone in at the right temperature and have the pizzas coming out perfect.

"I think it's even going to be better than what we were doing before," said Kelly.

While the pizza was at the forefront, that wasn't the only thing from the pre-Sandy Mad Hatter the Kelly family wanted to keep for their longtime customers.

"We wanted to keep our home growing," he added. "We were known for our popcorn, our popcorn machine, free popcorn for the kids and we're going to do that same thing."

"I mean, again, it was important to include a lot of these things. But now the views are just ... for me it's still breathtaking when I look out there."

Each floor has its own view of the beach and ocean and the views are nothing shy of incredible. In addition to the various views, each floor has a different vibe as well. Kelly admits that he's curious to see where the clientele takes them, but the different feel of each level is their mindset.

POST-SANDY TOWN

For the Kelly family, the town of Sea Bright isn't just where they built their business, it's where they built their family and home.

"I've lived in Sea Bright, my wife and I and we've been here, my kids are fourth generation in the house that we're in right now," explained Kelly. "So, yeah, my dad grew up here. So we kind of know what we're looking to do."

And while the summer months bring more visitors to the town, the basis of the original Mad Hatter and now the rebuild remains all things locals.

"We know the town, we know the area and we didn't really want to deviate much from that because we are a huge local hangout," he said. "I mean, people around here after Labor Day were like, 'Phew, we can finally go back to the Mad Hatter again,' come back home again and then football starts and everyone kind of really hangs out here."

"Our locals are number one and the rest you know they fill in the space, but that's who we want to take care of. We built this... with the locals in mind."

"Couldn't change the name of Mad Hatter because that was already legendary, but it was the whole concept."

BRIAN KIRK AND THE JIRKS WITH HORNS A' BLAZING

BY WENDY MCCLURE NIGHT & DAY MAGAZINE

We have been enjoying Brian Kirk and the Jirks for the past 20 years, yet the band leader still feels a little insecure about making it his full-time gig. This has really worked well for him and whether you realize it or not, it's worked well for us; the audience, as well. Kirk will always bring out the whole seven-piece band with horn section no matter how much it costs. And the horn section is a huge draw.

BEHIND THE BAND

Kirk dabbles in real estate, flipping houses and playing landlord at a couple of properties since you never know what can happen in the music biz. He said the band is not his full-time occupation although it is bringing in full-time wages, for now. But make no mistake, he and his band are successful; so much so that he is a little lost as to where he should take the band next. For a cover band, they are charting territory that no band before them has, such as filling 1,500 seats at the Count Basie Center for the Arts and watching the whole crowd sing and dance along with them.

Kirk is the lead on vocals and plays guitar. David Pershan is on guitar, Kristin Cochran is a vocalist, Tom O'Brien on bass, Bryan Douglas on keyboards and Tom Cottone on drums. The oh so important horn section consists of Tyrone Fredericks Jr. on saxophone, Joel Mikulyak on trombone and Matthew Cochran on trumpet.

"The Jirks was an idiotic decision, made in a moment," Kirk said. "Thrown out in conversation by the band's bassist at the time, Nick Massarow. Kirk said, 'Yeah, that's great. We'll run with it for like six months and then we'll change it to something else.' But the name and the band caught on. Kirk said a lot of things that he finds funny, not everyone may agree but he thinks they at least get it.

When it comes to original music Kirk thinks it's a dead end for him.

"Honestly," he said, "I'm a very good songwriter, maybe I'm not, but I know I'm not a great artist."

He lacks the focus you need for going into the studio and all the details you need to attend to. He's more into the immediate and present, which is being on stage and that's what he said he is really good at. It's not that he wouldn't like to have a hit record, but he doesn't want to do what is required to make that happen. They are already playing concert-type venues and he doesn't need someone in Omaha to know who he is.

He said, "It's not in my ego to do that."

SEE THEM LIVE

What sets the band apart from other cover bands on the scene? Kirk said, "It's almost like we're the band at the bottom of the Titanic because it's not, 'Watch me play this song,' it's, 'Let's enjoy it as a group gathered in a room and do it together.'"

He said there are songs built specifically for those situations and they typically play them. Songs that are built for a room like "Sweet Caroline" by Neil Diamond, "Uptown Funk" by Mark Ronson, featuring Bruno Mars, "Thunder Road" and "Rosalita" from Bruce Springsteen and "Feel It Still" from Portugal. The Man. He can't explain what it is about these songs other than they're catchy and they get people up and moving.

Kirk feels blessed everyday that he gets to do this. He said it's an enormously gratifying occupation and he never takes it for granted. He still gets so enamored that anyone comes out to see them play.

He sums it up by saying, "We, without arrogance, may be the best around. We're just really good and I'm proud of that."

You can check out their full schedule at jirks.com.
